PRACTICUM/MIXED-LANGUAGE GROUP & FACULTY ASSIGNMENTS:
Find your group number below (see page 5); go to the room to which your group is assigned by 9:00 am each morning. This schedule assures you of a variety of student presentations and languages to observe and a variety of instructors leading discussion/evaluation sessions.

It is crucial that you be on time every day. Even if you are not presenting, having others come in late makes giving a presentation much harder. Please be considerate.

MICROTREACHING: GENERAL INFORMATION

1. You will be asked to teach two short lessons: first day of class (5 min.) and vocabulary and grammar focus (10 min.) and one 20-minute extended teaching segment. The specific details of these assignments will be presented during the morning lecture and discussed in your afternoon classes. General guidelines for peer teaching are given below.

2. Included in this syllabus is a copy of a lesson planning sheet for you to use for each assignment. Make a copy for yourself and a copy to give to the session evaluator. Also included in this syllabus is a copy of the form report that will be forwarded to your afternoon session leader by the morning instructor. This form is used to provide your afternoon instructor with feedback on your areas of strength and those areas that need improvement. You may discuss your evaluation with your afternoon instructor. Lesson plans must be written in English.

3. Each of your teaching assignments will be recorded on video. This video will provide you with a permanent record of your teaching that you can review yourself or with your program director.

4. Visuals (clip art, drawings, transparencies or PowerPoint slides) will make your presentation more effective, but this is not required.

General Guidelines for Peer Teaching

1. In your lessons, you will present a progression of activities for developing the ability to communicate in a culturally appropriate manner in the language that you will be teaching. Although each lesson has a specific focus (e.g., first-day expressions, vocabulary and grammar, and, extended sequence), all should be based on an overarching COMMUNICATIVE GOAL.

   A. CONSIDER YOUR AUDIENCE: Some members of your peer teaching group know little of your language; direct your teaching towards them, and try to ignore the fact that some others know as much as you do.

   B. SELECT YOUR TOPIC AND OBJECTIVES: Assuming no prior knowledge on the part of your audience, design a series of activities to reach a communicative language goal in a culturally appropriate manner. Be sure to formulate your objective(s) in student terms before planning your lesson. What should students be able to DO by the end of the lesson?

   C. PLAN YOUR LESSON: It should consist of four elements:
      1) Presentation - First, present the new material (function(s) and/or, structures) within a realistic context.
      2) Practice - In this phase, students have a chance to work with what you have presented. Meaningful structured practice is suggested here. Rules of thumb: a) It is often good to build in a reception phase (comprehension check) before a production phase (asking students to use the words, phrases or structures); b) recognition activities should precede cued or free recall activities.
      3) Application - Students show you and themselves what they can do with what you are teaching them. Communicative (or at least meaningful) activity is expected here.
      4) Assessment - Evaluate whether your students learned what you wanted them to. You can do this for example through an additional communicative activity or mini-quiz.

         (These four elements do not have to occur in this strict sequence; but they should all be present.)

   D. USE YOUR VISUAL MATERIALS, if suitable to your presentation (photos, drawings, transparencies, PowerPoints).

2. 20-Minute Lesson: Base your 20-minute lesson on a topic different from the one you presented in your 5 and 10-minute session. Assume no prior knowledge of the language; you must teach it all!
What’s available at OSU?

There are a number of computer labs on campus, most of them are overseen by the Office of Distance Education and ELearning (ODEE). Lab sites, phone numbers, and hours are listed in many places including The Lantern (OSU’s newspaper) and the ODEE website: http://odee.osu.edu/public-computing

ODEE is the technical support office for the multimedia rooms in which many of you will teach in during the year. They have a “help-line” you can use to access their services. Call 614-247-4357 or (8-HELP) or email classroomhelp@osu.edu. They will assist you with any classroom problems you are having trouble with – from lights to computers.

Take some time to explore the ODEE website for other services.

Arts and Sciences Technology (ASCTech)

ASCTech offers computer and technical assistance to the faculty, staff and graduate students employed by the College of Arts and Sciences. Check out their website at http://asctech.osu.edu/

Digital Flagship Program

Ohio State, in collaboration with Apple, is creating a comprehensive, university-wide digital learning initiative that will support educational innovation to benefit students and economic development opportunities for campus and the broader community. Ohio State will establish:

- A student success initiative to integrate learning technology throughout the university experience — both inside and outside the classroom — and help provide universal access to a common set of learning technologies. Timeline: Starting in fall 2018, new first-year students at all campuses will receive an iPad Pro with tools and apps.
- An iOS design laboratory offering technological training and certification to faculty, staff, students and members of the community interested in developing apps in Swift, the Apple programming language. Timeline: The lab will open in a temporary space on the Columbus campus in 2018 and a permanent location in 2019.
- University-wide training for students to learn coding skills that will help enhance their career-readiness in the app economy. Timeline: Training will begin in spring 2018.

For more information, see: https://it.osu.edu/digital-flagship
